

Get O'Reilly free with your library card

O'Reilly for Public Libraries is a deep, curated collection of books, video courses, and audiobooks built around technology and business. It comes from O'Reilly Media, the publisher behind a long line of trusted technical books, and it runs right in your browser on any device.

Here is the part most people miss: your public library card may already unlock it, at no cost to you. Many libraries across the country offer it, and the list keeps growing. If you work in technology, data, AI, programming, cybersecurity, cloud computing, or analytics, it is worth two minutes to check whether yours is one of them.

WHAT YOU GET

60,000+

books across tech and business

30,000+

hours of video courses

3,000+

audiobooks and expert playlists

Any

device, anytime, in your browser

▲ IT & software

▲ Programming

▲ Data & analytics

▲ AI & machine learning

▲ Cybersecurity

▲ Cloud computing

▲ Business & leadership

▲ Professional development

ONE MORE REASON TO LOOK

My own books are in the collection. If your library offers O'Reilly, you can read Advancing into Analytics and Modern Data Analytics in Excel, along with my courses, without paying a thing.

HOW TO CHECK YOUR LIBRARY

- 1 Search your library website for O'Reilly (often listed under databases, e-resources, or research and learning).
- 2 If you find it, sign in with your library card number and PIN.
- 3 No luck? Ask a librarian, or request that they add it. Libraries take patron requests seriously.

Free, high quality learning is sitting in plain sight.

Check your public library, and pass this along to someone who would put it to good use.